Live via Zoom

Tracking Shorebirds and Seabirds of the North Atlantic

Dr. Pamela Loring

Wildlife Biologist with the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Division of Migratory Birds

Thursday, March 4 at 7:00 p.m.

Tracking technologies, including radio and satellite transmitters, reveal fascinating information about the behavior and migratory routes of birds.

This presentation highlights key findings from studies conducted by the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service and partners on movements of shorebirds and seabirds marked with transmitters at sites throughout the Atlantic, including Monomoy National Wildlife Refuge on Cape Cod. Current efforts to develop a collaborative tracking network to monitor bird and bat movements at offshore wind energy areas will also be discussed.

Our Speaker: Dr. Pamela Loring is a Wildlife Biologist with the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service Division of Migratory Birds. She works on a range of projects related to the conservation and management of shorebirds and seabirds throughout the Western Hemisphere.

She holds a PhD in Environmental Conservation from the University of Massachusetts Amherst and a MS in Biological and Environmental Sciences from the University of Rhode Island. For her graduate research, she used satellite and digital VHF technologies to estimate movement patterns and habitat use of seabirds, shorebirds, and terns in the western North Atlantic.
